2 HISTORY

Cave men's social life took place around a bonfire. Nature itself in its volcanoes and the lightning that set trees on fire, paved the way to the first spark that was lit many thousands of years ago by rubbing two stones together or possibly a vine against a stick. Fire was the way to keep safe, the way to defend themselves, their protection against the cold and, many times, the way they communicated. Fire was imposing but at the same time warm and comforting; it made it possible to eat a warm, cooked meal, light up the darkness of the night and, later on, create pottery and tools. Fire represented energy and it was important to keep it lit.

8 WILDLIFE

At night, the jungle comes alive and the sounds of the fauna become more audible. There is no way to guarantee that you will be able to witness the great diversity of the wild fauna that lives in the jungle along these paths, but you can be sure that the millenary species that played a very important role in the area's ancient civilizations will be quite present and closer than you think.

Jaguar

The jaguar is the third largest feline in the world, after the tiger and lion, and the largest and most powerful in the Americas. Its habitat extends from Mexico to South America. The jaguar's jaws are exceptionally strong compared to other large cats, allowing them to bring down large prey like deer, tapirs, peccaries, anacondas and alligators.

For the Maya, it was an animal that symbolized the setting sun as they considered that the sun turned into a jaguar by night in order to fight against the forces of the underworld to be reborn victorious at sunrise.

Crocodile

The American crocodile is the best-known species in our continent. It is medium sized in comparison with other species reaching 13 to 20 feet in length and even the largest specimens are boast a great speed when it comes to attacking and defending themselves. Although it might look ferocious, it is a vulnerable species. It is a solitary nocturnal species. The Maya imagined the earth as a huge crocodile where men move about unaware of where they were stepping and on whose back grew the vegetation of the forests, jungles, desserts and tundra.

Deer

The white tailed deer is one of the most adaptable species in the world and its presence is favorable to a large variety of ecosystems, from coniferous to deciduous forests in valleys and from an open savannah to mountain territories. Its fur during the summer is a reddish-brown and changes during the winter to a gray-brown, which helps it to blend in with the tones in its surroundings thus helping it avoid predators. According to legend, that color change was granted to it by a group of genies when a deer fell into their cave while being persecuted by a group of hunters. Deer were used by the Maya in their sacrifices to the gods due to their beauty, speed and lightness.
